What is the difference between a marriage and a civil union?

A civil union is a form of state-level relationship recognition for couples, regardless of gender, that entitles them to receive the same benefits and protections as married spouses. Unlike marriages, civil unions do not have any rights under federal law (such as federal income tax filing, survivor benefits of federal pensions, and social security). Same-sex marriage was legalized in 2015, but civil unions are still valid in Colorado.

How to merge a civil union into a marriage

Civil unions can be merged into a marriage without separately dissolving the civil union. You must obtain a marriage license through the process outlined above. Check with your clerk and recorder's office for specific information on the merging process.

Civil unions in other states

Civil unions, domestic partnerships, and other similar relationships entered into in another state are recognized in Colorado.
